To marry or not to marry? That's the question, Whether 'tis nobler in the bach to suffer The jeers and banters of outrageous females, Or to take up arms against a sea of troubles, And by proposing end them. To court ; to marry ; To be a bach no more; and, by a marriage end The heart-ache and the thousand and one ills. Bachelors are heir to; 'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wished. To court ; to marry ? To marry ! perchance to rue-ay, there's the rub ; For in that state what afterthoughts may come, When we have shuffled off this mortal coil, Must bring repentance. There's the respect That makes men live so long a single life, For who would bear the scorn of pretty girls, The hints of widows, the insolence of married men, The inconvenience of undarned socks And thread-bare coats and shirts with buttons off, To pangs of love-fits, and the misery Of sleeping with cold feet, the dumps, the blues, The horrors and the owl-like loneliness; When he himself might his quietus make With a bare " will you have me?" Who would bear To fret and groan under a single life, But that the dread of something after marriage-That undiscovered net-work from whose meshes No venturer escapes, puzzles the will And makes us rather bear the ills we have

The Feejee Islands.

It will be remembered that some time ago two Americans and an Islander were killed and eaten at Uaia, a small island on the westward side of the Feejeean Archipelago, the inhabitants of which are still heathen. Complaint having been made to Captain Sinclair, of the U. S. corvette Vandalis, he chartered the schooner Mechanic, and sent fifty men by her, with instructions either to secure the murderers or to exact satisfaction in some other mode. On arriving at Usia, a message demanding a surrender of the culprits was sent on shore. The only response was a defiance, with an intimation that ovens were being got ready to bake all the white men, if they would but "come on." The Americans could not stand this, so they landed forthwith, and climbed to the fortified town of the natives, erected upon a lofty cliff. On arriving they found that the Feejeeans had made good their escape on the other side. The Americans, therefore, fired the town and descended again. But in so doing they had to pass a defile wherein the natives had posted themselves. The latter fired from this ambush, and made a sally upon the Americans, entangling the latter in the defile. But the white men fought their way out sturdily, forced the Feejeeans on to more open ground, and completely routed them. In this affair, notwithstanding the ambush, no lives were lost on the side of the Americans. Two officers and five men, however, were wounded. The hurt of one, a marine, was severe, being a gunshot wound in the breast. The other hurts were contusions from clubs and were less serious. Of the Feejeeans sixteen were known to have been killed, and fifteen severely wounded. It is thought probable, however, that the loss has been still greater.

Some time ago a ship, or bark, from Sydney, called at Feejee for the purpose of obtaining labor for Reunion, or some other place, in the same manner as such labor is said to have been procured from the Kingsmill group. 500 Fe-jeeans were wanted. They were to be engaged for five years at a few dollars per annum. The precise amount we forget. Payment was to be made at the expiration of their term of servitude. But not a man could be got upon such terms. We have not been able to ascertain the name of this vessel.

Touching the cession of Feejee to Great Britain, as reported yesterday, we have since ascertained that Mr. Pritchard, the British Consul, arrived in Sydney several days since, by the John Wesley, and we believe, although the whole affair has been kept very "quiet, that he is about to proceed to England with the treaty. According to the terms agreed upon, this cession, if accepted at all, must be accepted before the 11th of September next, as, unless the American indemnity is paid by that time, it will probably be exacted by force from the native chieftain, and the principal object of ders, tablets and prisms had been extracted from the latter in making this cession will be defeated .- Syd-
